Advices

Rando Vanoise has been designed to help you pick and choose your outings, but cannot be held liable where they are concerned. The mountain offers up a wide range of routes and trails for cyclists of all levels, but remember, it is a living, unpredictable environment and it is important that you head out suitably equipped. Ask advice from cycle rental operators.

If in doubt, you can take an introductory lesson in how to ride an electric bike with an instructor.

If you see a herd ahead, slow down and go round it. If there is a patou, a guard dog, climb down from your bike and walk, pushing it alongside you. Avoid making any sudden or aggressive gestures towards the dog and move away from the herd slowly and calmly. The dog will only be checking that you do not pose a threat to its herd. Respect the parkland and close gates behind you after you've gone through them.

The mountain is living, please respect it by staying on the paths and tracks.

The fire-pump hut (C)

Its roof is composed of fine slate tiles from the former quarry located below Vignotan. In bygone days, the local population had good reason to fear fires. The tightly packed houses and wooden buildings helped propagate them and villages were often entirely destroyed as a result. In 1859 a major fire destroyed much of the hamlet of Villarnard. And a second outbreak in May 1934 also caused a great deal of damage in the heart of the hamlet.

The covered washhouse of Villarnard (D)

It is equipped with a remarkable pair of 4-metre-long dressed stone slabs and is located at some distance from the hamlet.

Hamlet of Villarnard (E)

Located in the delegated municipality of La Perrière, which has been part of the municipality of Courchevel since 2017, the hamlet lies on the northern slope 1000 metres above sea level, surrounded by a variety of landscapes. Huddled in the midst of a plateau, its vernacular architecture bears witness to the art of “traditional building”. The hamlet has largely succeeded in protecting itself from the ravages of poorly conceived renovations; many of its buildings are still in their original state, coming into view as you turn down an alleyway, their walls free of bituminous cladding.

The village has kept all its heritage features intact, witnesses to the community life of days gone by: its Saint Roch and Saint Bernard Chapel, bread oven, covered washhouse, bachals (communal water troughs) and former school, which now houses the Maison du Patrimoine (Heritage Centre). The hamlet’s name derives from the word “Villard” or “Villaret”, which originally meant a small property, detached from a larger one in the 5th century, and the name of its first owner. In bygone days, Saint Roch, one of the hamlet’s protectors, was invoked against epidemics, the black death in particular. His feast day falls on 16 August.

The former school, which fell out of use in the 1950s, was renovated by members of the “Le Patrimoine de Villarnard” (Villarnard’s Heritage) Association. It has become the Maison du Patrimoine and houses a museum that acquaints you with men’s and women’s lives and professions and their children’s schooldays in a mountain environment. The museum is documented by a wide range of works compiled and published by the Association’s members and bearing witness to life in times past; it even exhibits a selection of the tools employed in bygone days. If you’d like to learn more on the subject, the works in question are available for sale.

The Heritage Museum is opened periodically by members of the association during July and August, and on Heritage Days.

The hamlet's former school (F)

Typical of late 19th-century architecture, the building is topped by a hipped roof and boasts a sturdy pegged wooden framework testifying to the fine reputation of La Perrière's carpenters. Its painted trompe-l'oeil corner decorations are still intact.

Until 1952, the school had a classroom that could accommodate up to 35 pupils. It was an itinerant facility as the hamlet's inhabitants moved house according to season. From the hamlet below to the one in the middle, and then higher up to Villarnard, and then down again following the same pattern in reverse. The schoolmistress started the school year on the 1 October, closing the school two weeks later when the children's families had to make their way down to Champétel for the harvesting and apple-picking season, emptying Villarnard of its population. She then opened up Vignotan's school. With the coming of winter, all the families made their way back up to Villarnard as the hamlet's barns stored the hay used to feed their cattle. They stayed there until spring, when then the schoolmistress again closed the school so as to enable the families to go and work in the valley's fields and plant their crops before returning to Villarnard later with their livestock. Although it was an itinerant school, the mistress always taught the same pupils. In the summer, as she had rather fewer pupils in her class every day, she packed her knapsack with books and went up to the pastures of Le Bouc Blanc with the animals. So it was that she followed her pupils as their families moved from one spot to another, and, high up in the mountains, taught them the names of their peaks and read them stories.

The bread oven of Villarnard (G)

In bygone days, this was a major centre of social life where the population gathered periodically to bake enough bread to last them several weeks. It was renovated throughout in 2006 thanks to the combined action of the Le Patrimoine association and Savoie's Architecture, Urban Planning and Environmental Council (CAUE).

Saint Roch and Saint Bernard Chapel (H)

It was built in the 16th century and still contains its original walnut communion rail and collection chest, along with a recently restored painting of agrarian saints.

🕒 The “bachals” (I)

These are stone water troughs that once provided the inhabitants and their livestock with drinking water. One of the hamlet’s bachals is a truly remarkable piece of work, hewn out of a single huge piece of solid rock.
